Luckily, there are plenty of alcohol software that can help you decide whether you should get drunk or not, and if you should, how to do it correctly. Some of them have special features for bartenders, while some are designed for private use, and some can actually track your drinking habits and analyze it for you. Alcohol 120% is such a program that is intended to be used by those who enjoy drinking alcohol and want to make it a more pleasant experience. It can tell you how much you drank, how you drank it, and even what your limits are. When you begin using the program, you will have to download and install the portable version of the application. There is a convenient installation wizard that will help you easily get the program set up. The first thing you will notice about this program is that it is rather simple to use. It is divided into 3 tabs: History, Settings, and Statistics. The first one is meant to store all the data related to alcohol that you are recording with the program. The other two are meant to show some of the data and to help you analyze it. The first tab is divided into three sections. The first one is a graph that will help you keep track of the volume and the duration
