EDUCATION, AS A CAUSE AND CURE Research shows links between inadequate education and poor health. At the Seminar on Education for the Prevention of NCDs, "Addressing the urgent need for investment in education for prevention of noncommunicable diseases: a call for the post 2015 development agenda" a host of priorities for developing countries were identified. These priorities include: an investment in universal primary education; redesigning the curriculum for health and life skills (including nutrition); reorienting the secondary school curriculum; developing teaching and learning materials; establishing health services at schools; giving priority to sport, physical activity, and education for healthy active lifestyles; giving schools the freedom to create opportunities for learning about healthy lifestyles. Schools play a crucial role in health promotion. School principals have an opportunity to develop and implement student health and wellness programs. Schools may be able to set up wellness committees which can help parents and the school to incorporate healthy nutrition and active lifestyle programs into the school day. Q: Protocol NSPersistentStoreCoordinator addPersistentStore? I have an app that uses Core Data. It has been working for a while now and suddenly I am getting a EXC_BAD_ACCESS when I call [coordinator addPersistentStore:...]. This was working just fine yesterday. I just restarted Xcode and even restarted my computer, but it still says this. I am developing on Xcode 3.2.6 using the iOS 4.0 SDK. I have tried running the app on all the devices I have available, from an iOS 3.2 device to an iPhone 4. A: If you haven't set the project to use the latest version of Core Data (currently 4.0), you'll need to add the Core Data Framework manually to your app. You can find the Core Data Framework for iOS on the Apple Developer site.
