Referees can now control the flow of the game using animation replays, zooming in and out on specific incidents. They can also issue players yellow or red cards with pinpoint accuracy, with just one, single touch, using a combination of digital and analog technology. The technology was first introduced in the FIFA Ultimate Team series, and has now been extended to FIFA's deep gameplay features. HyperMotion Technology captures and re-contextualises actions and input that would otherwise be lost in the action of professional football games. "We're very excited to be the first and only game in the world to use this new technology," said Trevor Rabin, Global Brand Director at EA Sports. "We've taken the standards for fidelity and immersion that we've set for 'FIFA 18' and applied that in a way that will give both our players and our fans a uniquely immersive experience."
